Smiling, my grandma allowed me to host an exhibition in her apartment once she is no longer alive. She left her apartment last year. We - that is, the artists invited by me, Manuel Kirsch, and I - take a weekend for the exhibition Ausleben, which now takes place at a special time in the undefined interspace of life plans. Everything was structured in the rooms by that lady who was always my grandma until the end and will continue to be. Many have a grandma and know their apartment. At some point, questions arise such as: What do we take with us, what do we discard? We artists temporarily add something. That „something“ is our art: paintings, sculptures, and objects that I place, hang, lay, incorporate into my grandmother's apartment and that connect and enter a dialog with the furniture and objects.

Ausleben is a group exhibition curated by Manuel Kirsch. He lives in Berlin and is an artist and grandson of Elisabeth Wetzel (1921 - 2022).
